Allow yourself breaks

Adequate breaks are important to help regain strength and help to avoid getting into dangerous situations.

Have a break drinking and eating and enjoy the scenery in the meantime. This helps to control tiredness and keep a balanced concentration.

Watch out the children

In case of difficult passages with the risk of falls, an adult has to assist the children.

Exposed routes requiring long concentration are not suitable for younger kids.

Safe <sup>in the</sup> mountains

during high season

The degree of difficulty of the routes is clearly indicated by the colour of the signs and based on the required experience: yellow for hiking trails, yellow with white- red-white tip for mountain trails and blue with white- blue-white tip for alpine trails.

The category of the trail indicates both its practicability and the requirements that the hiker with its equipment must have.

A sure step

Falls are unfortunately the most frequent causes of mountain accidents.

Be aware and don't go at a too high rhythm because that can cause fatigue and favour a fall.

Also getting out of the path is dangerous because it can increase the risk of falling and loss of orientation.

Suitable equipment

It is extremely important to wisely choose the equipment, especially the boots, based on the chosen route.

In your backpack you can't forget a rain coat (protection against rain), clothes against cold weather, sun screen, first aid kit, a map and a mobile phone (emergency number 117 or 112).

Fit and safe

A good health condition and a realistic evaluation of one's possibilities are basic before setting off along the paths. Choose a suitable itinerary and avoid individual trips because even the smallest hitch can turn into a serious emergency situation.

Communicate your itinerary to family or friends and don't change it.
